The federal judiciary of the United States is one of the three branches of the federal government of the United States organized under the United States Constitution and laws of the federal government. Article III of the Constitution requires the establishment of a Supreme Court and permits Congress to create other federal courts and place limitations on their jurisdiction. Judicial review is a process where the executive branch reviews decisions made by the judicial branch for legal correctness. The judicial branch has two main jobs: a) to ensure laws are fairly enforced and b) to interpret laws. Two types of cases are heard: criminal and civil. Criminal cases begin in a district court with a judge or jury deciding a verdict. The authority of a court to be the first court to hold trials in certain kinds of cases is known as original jurisdiction. Appellate jurisdiction allows courts of appeals to review decisions made by lower courts. The Supreme Court is the highest court in the federal system. Judicial review, remember to keep track of your sources in the citations section of the guided worksheet. Now that you have all of the information it is up to you and your partner to create a professional looking brochure. You must convince the readers of the brochure that the judicial branch is a necessary part of the United States government. To learn more about the judicial branch, view the Democracy in Action video.
