social marketing theory is a theory of mass communication that promotes socially valuable information and socially accepted behaviors. It tries to integrate marketing ideas, principles, tools, techniques and socially beneficial concepts to promote communication and benefit society. Consequently, social marketing scholars are beginning to advocate for a broader definition of social marketing. Social marketing is the application of marketing principles to enable individual and collective ideas and actions in the pursuit of effective, efficient, equitable, fair and sustained social transformation. Few technological developments have created enthused and petrified marketing communication professionals and academics more than the loose concoction of different platforms referred to as social media. While some marketing professionals have hailed the social media as a game-changing technology with a major impact on business, Corstjens and Umblijs (2012) have noted that even as a new paradigm of how social marketing theory is a collection of theories that focus on how socially valuable information can be promoted, this theory has been used by social and welfare organizations to help promote or discourage various behaviors. The theory is administrative in nature in that it seeks to outline a framework that can, get this from a library.
