Snow Country Yasunari Kawabata

Snow Country, Yasunari Kawabata’s 1957 novel, is a classic work of Japanese literature. Set in the snow country of Western Japan, the novel tells the story of Shimamura, a wealthy dilettante from Tokyo, who travels to an isolated mountain hot spring in December. There, he meets Komako, a lowly geisha, and falls in love with her. However, their love is destined to be short-lived.

The novel is known for its spare, lyrical prose and its exploration of themes such as beauty, sadness, and yugen (the Japanese concept of an inexpressible mood or feeling). Kawabata’s depiction of the snow country, with its snow-covered landscapes and the quiet, isolated life of the characters, is a central aspect of the novel.

Kawabata was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1968, in recognition of his “masterly art in which the beautiful and the tragic are rendered true.” The snow country of the title, with its white earth under the night sky, is a recurring motif throughout the novel, symbolizing the beauty and sadness of the characters’ lives.

The novel has been translated into several languages and has been the subject of many film and television adaptations. It is considered one of the most important works of Japanese literature and is widely studied in English and Japanese literature courses.

Yasunari Kawabata was born in Osaka, Japan in 1899 and died in 1972. He is remembered as one of the great novelists of Japanese literature, along with other major figures such as脚下栄子 and 樋口一葉.
