10 tips to create catchy titles for your classes and events by Rabbi Michoel Green May 18, 2015

English designing a rich educational curriculum and writing an engaging dvar torah are skills that many rabbis and educators have mastered. However, if your new lecture series does, you've only got room for your title and the opt-in form. But even if you create an opt-in page or a sales page that goes on and on about your offer, you still need a title that will stand out and spark people's interest. You want a title that doesn't sound like a cheap repeat of some other offer out there—one that is catchy yet clear.

91 awesome headline formulas to make your presentations instantly attractive. Yes, that goes for your videos, email, and every other medium you use to engage with your audience and tribe. Which then leads to the second obvious fact of the day: The most important part of your presentation is the headline you choose. You need to get your audience hooked, promise that you are going to deliver value, and make sure you write titles and subheadings that tell the reader why they need to spend time on that content.
